

Luke

Forsyth

Luke was born in 2022 and at seven weeks old, he began running fever and quit eating and drinking. He was quickly admitted to Atrium Health Levine Children's Beverly Knight Olson Children's Hospital and was diagnosed with a severe case of Respiratory Syncytial Virus (RSV). Luke was treated with fluids for dehydration, was on continuous oxygen due to low oxygen saturation and strong antibiotics because the RSV caused him to become septic. After three days, he felt much better and was discharged.

"Our experience at the Children's Hospital was overall welcoming and efficient. The quality of care exceeded our expectations for not only our child but for us as parents too," says Elizabeth, Luke's mom.

Luke is now two and is an active little boy! He loves playing outside, reading books, and playing with his dog Memphis.
